The Grand Canyon

This was their first look at the "Big Ditch". About 15 seconds after viewing it, Hailey proclaims that she didn't want to see the same big ditch over and over again! She warmed up later on and really enjoyed one of areas where they had a closed in look out area with hands on items.

This was our miserable attempt to take a personal and group family photo. Hunter was being a super pickle, which was annoying. Since the minute our trip started, he wanted nothing to do with me, which surprised me and made me a little sad. No kisses. No Hugs. No love. He gave it all to daddy. I couldn't even push the stroller without him griping at me! So for the entire week long trip, Hunter was stuck like super glue to his daddy. The person taking the group family photo was done in a flash and we never did get a good shot.

I got a personal tour from Hailey. Brady, Hailey and her cousins went and toured an area while I kept Hunter. He pitched a fit the ENTIRE time because Brady went with Hailey but my personal tour was worth it. Hailey showed me all the places they went - even the secret area where I snapped a quick photo of ourselves. She was a great tour guide!

The Grand Canyon trip was good. It isn't exactly a safe place to take small children but we all made it just fine. We traveled to and from areas by bus which was nice and walked some. We also ate some good food in a really hot hotel and had some good conversation and bonding time with each other. I would like to go back again some day and tour other areas and stay overnight. Maybe even hike to the bottom. I'll need help getting out though!
