My cute little car moved last Saturday. Before we went to go get our tree, Brady stopped and got me a new battery. So after the tree was put up, he went outside and worked on my car. It started right up! It has been sitting in our driveway all sad and lonely for almost 2 years now. He test drove it to make sure before I would even drive it. We went and got some new windshield wipers, some stuff to add to the full tank of gas that was still in it and he washed all the yuckies off of it. We did have a good laugh after we turned on the air and got splattered with dirt! I then drove it to Sonic. I was so nervous about driving it at first. I felt like I was sitting on the ground after driving the Yukon for so long. It has been fun reuniting with my car again though. It is fast and something about my sunroof makes me feel good. The car is in really good shape still. It is going to need an oil change and the timing belt changed if I drive it much more and maybe some new tires. They got flat from sitting in one spot for so long. Brady did order me 2 new sunvisors that were looking yucky due to the sun and a new cupholder that broke off years ago. I appreciate it and thanks so much for working on my car Brady! Maybe we can trade cars next week and I can go get yours clean. From the sounds your truck is making maybe it is a good thing. I don't think driving it until it dies is a good idea!
