The last two weeks have been pretty boring. Just the usual weekly activities of taking Hailey to her activites, household chores, church, etc. I wasn't feeling too well for about a week which is not typical for me. I even talked Hailey into taking a nap with Hunter and I TWICE so I could get some rest. We did pull out the John Deer Gator out of the messy garage when the weather turned warmer last week for a few days. I lounged in my hammock trying to soak up some warm sun rays. Hunter even got his first driving lessons. We definitely will have to work on the stearing! Brady moved the seat back for Hailey and moved it to the second speed which thrilled her to pieces. They cracked me up as they squealed about how much faster it was going!

Hailey did watch a commercial on one of the kids channels about how to make popsicles. She repeated the steps to me and I told her we could make some. I used to make popsicles this way when I was little. I actually don't own any of those popsicle forms. My one and only ancient blue ice cube tray worked just fine. She liked them the first day but wasn't thrilled about them the next day when the orange juice left a film layer on the top and she proclaimed they were greasy. So we rinsed it off and they were just fine. Picky, Picky!!!

Last night Brady volunteered to help me re-do my website. I have wanted it changed for some time. The green and yellow were getting old. He spent a few hours helping me out and I really appreciate it. It will be fun tweaking it over the next few weeks. I love it so far. Thanks for doing this for me Brady!!!

I am starting to want warmer weather to arrive - not hot weather - just warm. I am also wishing for a few days when the wind will die down some so we can burn the stick piles out back. I want to clean the back yard up from the winter and get our garden ready. If it works out, we are going to put in a bigger garden in a different location. I am excited about this.

The only other news that bummed me out was that my vacuum cleaner blew up last week as I was attempting to clean out my car. I told Hailey it died and I was sad. She said "Maybe it went to vacuum cleaner Heaven!" It is in the shop right now and should be back on Tuesday. Can't wait. Crumbs on the carpet in the living room annoy me!