Every day Hailey makes something. Ideas come to her and then she is off in a flash to her desk to create her masterpiece. She would be in heaven if an entire craft store was availble to her here at home. I do my best and give her fresh supplies every now and then. She loves pipe cleaners, scissors, paper, tape and glue to name just a few. Tape is high on the list. She has her own dispenser. Crayons are optional. She really isn't into coloring. She likes creating stuff more. Coloring bores her. This week she picked dandilions outside and taped them to a paper and put it on the refrigerator for me to enjoy. For her music class, she had to bring a statue that she made. She wanted to make a pretzel out of straws but when that didn't quit work out, she cut out stars from clay and put them on straws. I also picked up a soap paper card kit which was fun for her. There were all these sheets of soap you could cut out and make designs. She made one for her daddy, Kimber and one for herself. I love how she can entertain herself in this area. She is fun to watch!
