On Wednesday, we drove into Denison and visited the Children's Museum. It was nestled in one of the old store fronts in the downtown part of town. It wasn't too terribly big but they had a lot of things to do inside. Hailey enjoyed the grocery store section and the arts and crafts room the most. Hunter enjoyed looking at the animals, the large wooden train and the giant pirate ship. He was such a busy little boy on that ship! He wants to do everything he sees other children doing. There was an area up top that had a fireman's pole you could slide down on and go inside the ship. He kept saying "I try it too?" Scared me because I know he would try it if I wasn't close. I was proud of Hailey because she tried it on her second pass up top. She has wanted to do it for a long time but nerves have gotten the best of her. She was so tickled at herself when she did it. There was a really cute dinosaur that moved and you could sit on that Hunter wouldn't have anything to do with up close. He ran the shopping cart into it a few times though! It was a good little place to visit. If I lived in that town, it would be the perfect rainy day activity!
