This past weekend I found myself bored. Very bored. Not that I don't have things I could have done. Just none of it seemed too exciting. Brady was away at the Tackle Box and the kids and I hung out watching way too much television. I swept, mopped, did the dishes and laundry, let the kids play in the snow, took an extremely hot shower while the kids played in the tub with the play kitchenware, figured out how to print on cardstock on my new printer and cut out about 8 zillion pieces of cardstock. We ate about 8 zillion times too and enjoyed some homemade yummy snappy cookies (gingersnaps) and hot chocolate. I also found the Number of the Day on my wall on my way back from taking a load of laundry to a room. Doesn't everyone have the number of the day on their wall?

We also got out a few Easter items to decorate the house. I decided that I am not going to decorate like I used to anymore. I will just get out a few favorites to be festive for the kiddos and myself. I used to go all out because I enjoyed it. Now it is more of a pain to get it out and put it up. I am being sort of bah-hum-bug-ish I suppose but in all actuality no one ever sees it besides the kids! And now it seems like Hailey is getting sick. Yesterday morning she was stuffy but fine all day. She just woke up and her eyes look horrible and she has a yucky nose. Hopefully this is all it will measure up to be and little Hunter won't get it if he already doesn't!

Hunter enjoys talking to his daddy on the phone. He does not like giving the phone back so all conversations need to be finished before you hand a phone to Hunter!

I used to have a little white tree for all these cute little wooden eggs I have for Easter. It went in the trash last year after getting broken in too many places. Hailey went and made me one out of her pipe cleaners and hung it on the Atrium glass wall!

Can you guess what the Number of the Day was yesterday? For those who have forgotten, the Number of the Day is famous on Sesame Street! I had given her all my scraps of paper and this beautiful number zero and some fans were some of her creations. Oh and just in case you were wondering the number of the day today is 2!

