Today was picture day at Hailey's dance class. They wore the costumes that they are going to wear for the performance in May. She was dressed up to look like Cruella de Vil. The music is to that song too. They took professional pictures in one of the dance studios so I could only capture a few shots through the sheers on the window. I put her hair up in a bun with pins and a hairnet. She actually liked this and didn't complain once. Putting her hair in a bun reminded me of getting ready for ballet class when I took classes. I miss that. I would love to take classes again. We even put a little purple eyeshadow on her eyes and some pink lipstick so her face would stand out more. For the performance, she has to wear more as the lights on a stage tend to fade out faces. I did find out she has great lids for eyeshadow. I hope they stay that way. Eyeshadow will look great on her someday. I don't wear much makeup anymore. It was sort of fun shopping for the perfect purple color and pink lipstick for my little girl's performance. My makeup collection is pathetic and that is fine with me. I usually just wear eyeliner, mascara and lipstick. If I go out somewhere special, I will add beige and creme eyeshadow! I keep meaning to buy some base but I still haven't. I even had to buy some hairspray for Hailey's hair. This cracks me up in a way. Hairspray, base and powder used to be such staples for me. Good ole big hair days!!!

I posted a collage on The Tucker Blog if you want to go take a peek-see! Just click on the link on the front of my webpage and it will take you to the post.
