I purchased a ticket late Wednesday night and flew to Arizona Thursday afternoon to go visit my sister Tessa. She was scheduled to be induced to have her baby on Friday morning at 9 am. The kids stayed with Brady and Jessica part of the day on Saturday. I have never left my children before so I was quite anxious and happy all at the same time. I absolutely love my sister and being there was pretty amazing. I am glad my sweet husband let me go and get away. I know the children had a good time as well. They love their daddy and I am glad they got to spend more time with him. I think it did me some good to be away as well.

WAITING TO GO

Tessa was scheduled to be at the hospital at 9 am for her induction. We all got up and got ready when she received a call at 8:30 telling her to wait until they called her back. Her neighbor arrived promptly to take care of her boys but we sent her home to rest until it was time. The hospital had patients coming in like crazy. So we took before pictures and then went to Fry's grocery store. That was a pretty cool store. It has everything in it! We were getting anxious so she called to check. She was told to go ahead and eat lunch. Her neighbor brought lunch over. Just when Tessa decided to go lay down and talked me into taking a nap with her, the call came. We should have done that earlier. Stuff like that always happens to me!

OFF WE GO

Tessa, Rob and I left around 3 for the hospital. Her new car seat is so fun. I love the colors. She has a matching stroller too. Baby stuff is fun to play with!
