I have misplaced the little Sony camera charger I like to use. My little Sony fits in my purse nicely and takes a larger battery. Without a charger, the camera is now dead. So this afternoon, I pulled out the larger Sony camera that we have. I have taken many pictures with it and it works great. It is just that I seem to have to charge those Double AA's way too often. I think this is because I just need to buy a new set. I think the batteries have lost most of their charge even though they are rechargable. I wish it took the newer square batteries like Brady's nice Canon and that one I can't seem to find! So as I was getting re-aquainted with my camera, I snapped a few photos of my cute little boy. He was willing, posing and smiling with his eyes open. Lately he closes them with a cute little smirk. Then he announced, "That's enough. No more pictures!". I kept snapping but he meant business. So I turned on the camera. He no longer says "Pic-ers" for pictures. It is now just plain ole pictures. Sad. I liked hearing him say "Pic-ers"! He also got another haircut the other day. She cut it too short. He looks like an older boy. Since he has naturally curly hair, I like it somewhere in between long and short. That way I can still play with his tiny curls and pretend he really isn't two and a half!
