Our flight left the next morning and it was getting late. We decided to keep driving to SLC instead of stopping somewhere for the night and then getting up early to continue the drive. I wish we could have stayed at my brother's home in Idaho Falls and hang out with him some more but we were pressed for time. We did stop and let the children exercise for a bit but they pretty much kept getting on each others nerves until they fell asleep. Hunter was more vocal about it than Hailey. She would pester him silently with a poke or something like that. This afternoon/evening was the first time in the entire week that we pretty much heard from them after being in the car so long each day. They had hit their limit.

I enjoyed looking at the sunset and trying to take pictures of it while moving. I also loved the change in the surroundings. Right before you get into Idaho Falls you come across massive Lava Fields. They were impressive.

Passing time in the car... Hailey made creations with fruit rollups.

It was a long but memorable last day!
