I wasn't going to post about this but I need to tell my hubby THANK-YOU for replacing the kitchen faucet, the kid's bathroom faucet and for fixing the lovely leak from parts underneath the dishwasher leaving a moldy, stinky mess in the storage cabinet next to it. I am happy to say that the darn things don't leak anymore and delighted about the new faucet in the kids bathroom. Water actually pours into the basin like it was meant to do. When you would turn on the water before, it would hit the edge and water would back up onto the counter.

He also tackled the leaky faucets outdoors. It was kind of frustrating because even though we measured before we purchased parts, they are ALL different sizes. Apparently they don't make the size we need in a few anymore so they have to stick out farther than we would like. I am not exactly caring though - at least they are not leaking all the time anymore!

The bathroom tub, bar sink and roof/skylight are all that is left to fix. They are more intensive and he is not looking forward to those. I am happy he has the skills to fix what he has done so far though. I am sure paying someone to do it would have been pricey.

* I still have to deep clean the carpet by the back door. Since it has been raining for two weeks straight, rainwater made its way into the house through a faulty seal. I have a heavy rug there and didn't know until I moved it to remove crumbs.

* I also was pleasantly surprised that the kitchen utensil drawer was fixed too when I was putting up utensils this afternoon. Brady fixed that too. So happy I don't have to worry about that heavy thing falling on my foot or the kids anymore.

SO MR. FIX-IT-MAN... Thank-you for the fixes. I love them and appreciated your time spent doing it!!!

My Simple New, Not Leaking Kitchen Faucet!

The kid's new handy functional faucet! This is actually the second one we picked. The first one we picked had to be returned.
