For Christmas, I purchased this activity set called Marbulous from Lakeshore Learning Center for Hailey. Brady and Hailey both enjoy putting stuff together and it looked like a great activity she could spend some time doing by herself and with Brady. On Christmas Eve she opened it up and wanted to play with it. I told Brady to let her play with it so she would be occupied while the rest of the family opened up presents. I never imagined him getting so involved. I thought she would just tinker with it and enjoy. He spent the entire time just about putting the thing together for her like the example picture! She has enjoyed playing with it on and off since then. Last night she got it out and started to create something. Brady came over and they both played for a long time and wound up using all the pieces. Something which thrilled them both. They had a great time seeing whose marble went down faster. Hailey had a hard time being careful at times though. It stayed there until this morning when she put way to much pressure on the top and it came crashing down!
