

A storm came through and dumped some pretty white stuff on Saturday and Sunday. I didn't mind much because I am dreading the heat of summer. Mr. Sun came out late Sunday afternoon and warmed up things a bit. Hailey noticed the snow starting to melt some. So we all went out to play in the most likely last snow of the season. We rolled some balls for snow people. I was impressed that Hunter got his ball rolling for a long time. Determination! He also really wanted to leave his ball in the street and smash everything up but he was denied our objects and had to resort to kicking and stomping on his own. Hailey rolled several and made a cute little snow dog - complete with a wood stick collar. She loves the snow so much. I am glad she noticed and we all went out when we did. It for sure is going to melt away today!

* Hailey's hat cracks me up. It kept moving and falling off when she was rolling snow. She however can't stand for hats to cover her ears. It really bugs her. Something about not being able to hear.

[video:http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=[illegible]]