Last Friday the 21st of May to be specific, Hailey graduated from Kindergarten. She has been anticipating this day. They have been practicing for it in class. She even asked me earlier in the week if we could get her a present since she would be graduating soon. Normally she doesn't ask for gifts. We had just come back from her aunt Kelsey's college graduation. I think she picked up on the present thing. I even asked her what she might want. She said that she knew she was too young but that she would really like a phone. That cracked me up. She wants an iphone like her daddy!

We went to her school classroom for the big ceremony. I even got teary eyed a few times. She was beaming as she made eye contact with us throughout the program. It was a cute program. After it was over, I gave her a cut flower from one of my rose bushes. Special occasion warrant flowers!

When we got in the truck, she found a special surprise in her car seat. It was a Build-A-Bear box. She waited until she got home to open it up. She found a colorful bunny which she named "Flower". Flower was introduced to Princess Bunny her first Build-A-Bear animal. She had fun playing with them for a long time.

We also decided to go see our first 3D movie ever and saw Shrek. It was cute. It was a sweet ending to a really good day.

(Other than the fact that my father called to tell me some not so pleasant news about his health right before we went to her graduation.)

Hunter's favorite part was getting to eat the celebratory cookie

This was taken right after the graduation was over. Love her smirky smile!

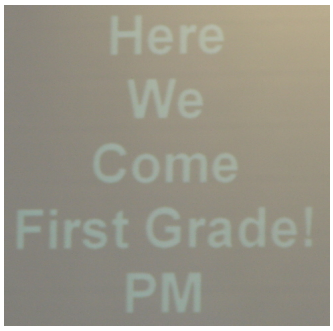

The proud parents - the one with lipstick on is still sporting a left over fever blister!
