That is the sound of Hailey's rock tumbler. The one she got for Christmas last year. We had a little Christmas in July and finally opened it. I was going to put it in the Atrium but thankfully the plug will only work one direction in the outlets in there. I decided to put it out on the front porch bench. We failed to take some before pictures. We are in the second phase right now. It takes some time to do the whole process. In the meantime, it is a noisy little thing. Every time I walk out front, I keep wondering when the ice cream maker will be done. It sounds just like one - only this one goes for days and days. The rocks we have washed once are colorful and smoother now. Can't wait to see the end results. Hailey is excited to turn them into some jewelry. The tumbler kit came with some hardware and some glue. Pictures for sure to come!
