Hailey told me this summer that she needed to find her style. She isn't quite sure what that means other than the fact that she finally has expressed that she doesn't like some of the clothes she has been wearing. She has been so happy go lucky in this department. So I took her shopping to get an idea. I already knew sparkly stuff and bling makes her happy. REALLY HAPPY. I did learn that she does not like the color black at all. She likes bright happy colors. All dark colors bother her. After picking out a few new shirts, she was pretty much done and got super bored. She said she thought she had enough to wear. She is big into shoes though and had more fun shopping for those. Her new Sketchers blingy shoes delight her to no end. I would have liked them too as a child only because there is a unicorn on them. She has grown so much since school was out in May and I am so glad I bought larger sizes on some things. She wears a size 8 now. Crazy! She loves wearing new clothes and we are still on the search for "her style"!

Enjoy this picture of our sleepy 60's girl!!!

Apparently those glasses and headband that she got from a birthday party ARE exactly her style. She loves them. I pretty much think she was born in the wrong era. She would have made the perfect 60's child. She makes me laugh.