Hunter has become very attached to his daddy lately. Today Brady left to go to work out the deck door so as to not wake up Hailey who was sleeping in the living room. Hunter cries after he leaves but gets over it after a few minutes. I thought he was fine until I found him wandering in the kitchen calling "Daddy, Daddy, Daddy!". He would look out the window and reach up to the door knob. He was really sad.

One of the things he loves his daddy for is that Brady takes him to "see things". Hunter points to objects and Brady takes him there to see and touch it. He also likes it when he gets to hold Brady's cell phone. He has learned which button to push to make the screen picture come back if it goes away. He especially likes to listen to daddy's Zune and wear his headphones. Hunter has heard way too many episodes of Turtles lately and gets super excited when the theme song comes on. He laughs loudly, dances and says his version of "Turtles"! It is actually pretty cute to see.

P.S. The nurse called from the GI clinic and said that the blood test for Celiac Disease came back negative. Hooray! Now let's mark Cystic Fibrosis off that list...

