We all went to our ultrasound for baby #3 on January 18, 2012. The tech asked us before she began if we wanted to know the sex of the baby. We told her we didn't but if we happen to see or know that was okay. We did tell her that Hailey wanted to know and that it was okay if she just told her. When it came time to take a closer peek, the tech whispered into Hailey's ear our babies sex. Hailey was thrilled and still is to be left with such a secret. Upon checking her back into school, she told the office staff, her teacher and class. They have even voted on a name for the new baby. She was really excited to tell her horse lesson teacher too. It was really cute to hear her horse teacher say "I know a secret!" Hailey is such a good secret keeper and so far hasn't messed up even though we have harassed her a bit for fun. I love seeing how fun this is for her. Can't wait to meet the baby in June to see if she is right!

The ultrasound was amazing. It is incredible how much things have improved since we all saw Hunter. We were only given these 6 images out of the bunch she snapped. It was very cool seeing the baby open it's mouth and move all around. We all got to view the baby on a large television screen on the wall. We were told the baby looked great and from the measurements was due on June 10th (instead of our original 17th). I laughed as my birthday is June 9th. I am secretly hoping the baby comes before then so I can say that I was 39 when the baby was born since Brady won't turn 40 until August. He's gonna tease me forever about being 40 I am sure!

* And I thought it would drive me a little nuts not knowing officially the sex of the baby but it hasn't. Plus we have a girl and a boy and all newborns really need are diapers and pajamas at first!
