We drove to the lakehouse to spend Mother's Day this year. Brady was wanting to try to work on getting some wireless stuff setup but it didn't quite work out. Too much juggling around with all of us - but actually he needed REAL help :) The weather was nice and gave us a taste of the beginnings of summertime. The H's were anxious to play on the sandy beach areas. Hunter presented me with his first school handmade Mother's Day gift. His hand print was on a tea towel in the shape of a flower. Hailey made a cute flower pot picture and sang me a song that of course made me teary. Those are the bests gifts ever. Love those kiddos. I was showered with love, presents and we had a yummy cookout at the marina with family. It was a short, fast paced weekend as we had to travel back for school. Ready for slow weekends and lazy mornings!

We saw 3 baby armadillos in the backyard. I need some baby dillos here. So cute.

Marquis