Since Hailey got poked so many times, the nurses went to find her some "gifts" that get donated to make her feel better. They usually give out just stickers. This is what is remaining of her sticker collection and the gifts she received from the hospital nurses. Hailey had to get the first set of shots in her legs Sunday night. I woke her up to go get them. I didn't think she would want stickers afterward because she was so sleepy. I told the nurse it was okay and we headed off down the hall. She had a whole collection anyway. Well we got a few steps down they hall and through her tears she says "My stickers!" The nurse looked at me and then ran back to get her some. What an ordeal it was to try to get an IV in Hailey and then top it off with 4 shots in her legs. She received the second round of shots Monday night. She now takes the antibiotic orally which is much more pleasant. Since putting it in the legs is painful, they added some pain medication to it as well which numbed her leg and it really freaked her out the first night. She didn't like the fact it burned and she couldn't feel her legs for a bit. The second night went much better and Brady snuggled with her in the bed and she drifted off to sleep.
