Today was Hunter's first time to be front facing in his car seat! The general rule of thumb to be able to turn your children around is 1 year AND 20 pounds. Well he meets the year mark and the 20 pounds (give or take a cup of liquid or a full up diaper!). I have been weighing him this week and he keeps going back and forth between 19 and 20 pounds.

I decided to turn him around when this sweet lady picked me up from the carwash place so we could go home for a bit while they finished up detailing our car. It was much easier than re-doing and adjusting the car seat. I think he liked it so on the way home I had Brady put it front facing as well. This will be fun as he can now see my face better when I drive instead of looking into the child mirror I have hanging up- and he won't get a neck ache from trying to turn his head around to talk to me. Another milestone... Love you baby Hunter!
